One of many things that I liked very much for SSRS over Crystal Reports is "Report Subscription". At work we use Crystal Reports as our primary reporting system. And to provide scheduled report deliveries via email we have designed our own little .NET application that allows users to create schedule and manage automated report deliveries via email.

I was developing a SSRS report that fetches data from table that has 2 billion rows. Report had around 80+ columns displaying data. On the verge of acceptance testing client came up with a concern that the report is too big and he needs an option to control the number of columns that gets displayed in report for better viewing and exporting capabilities.
